If I had no bones, my brains, lungs, head and larger blood vessels would be lying around in me sort of looselike, and might get hurted, but now the bones get hurted, but not much lest it is a hard hit. If my hones were burned, I should be all brittle and you could crumble me up, be cance all the animal would be out of me he limber. Teacher showed us some bona that had been scaked. I could tie a knot in one. I had rather be scaked that burned. Some of my bones don't grow mug to my other bones like the branche of a tree do, and I'm glad they don't. for if they did I couldn't play leap frog and other good games I know. The reason they don't grow that way is because they Joints is good things to have in bone There are three kinds. The ball and socke joint is like my shoulder joint. Teache showed it to us, only it was the thigh of a cow. One end was round and smooth and whitiah; that is the ball end. The other end is the socket. It is saucerlike and oils itself. Another joint is the hinge joint. like my elbow. It swings back and forth, olling itself, and never creaks like the schoolroom door does. The other joint ain't much of a joint. It's in the skull and don't have no motion.

All of my bones put together in their wight places make a skeleton. If I leave out some or put some in their wrong places te ain't no skeleton. Crippled and deformed people don't have no skeletons. Some ani-mals have their skeleton on the outside. I'm glad I ain't them animals, for my skeleton like it is on the chart wouldn't look well on the outside.-San Francisco

Anbrev Everdene looked out unon Sackville street and vawned. Only an netant before he had written "Finis" to an article with a dash of the penscross the last sheet, and now the manuscript lay ready for the post among the debris of printer's proofs, new novels awaiting review, etc., with which the writing table was strewn. ANTI-NERVOUS One of the best known litterateurs in London and a brilliant convenationalist, his tongue could be as scathing as his pen, and it was said of him with regard to the latter weapon of warfare that in half a dozen polished sentences he could do more toward damning a book than any two of his compeers. A big, loosely made man, Mr. Everdene, with shrewd, gray eyes and the pessimism of a modern. Studying his face as I had no bones in me, I should not have at he lounged by the window, his hands much motion as I have now, and grandms in the pockets of his smoking jacket, one could see that he had a lively sense of humor combined with his other charectoristics and understood the interest "Lady Hilyard," muttered Everdene reading the inscription. "I can't recall If I was soaked in a kind of seid, I would the name. Bother the woman! What does she want? However-ask her to come up. Blake."

When she entered, a fair, elegant woman of perhaps five and twenty, in an irreproachable Parisian toilet, he was still more convinced that he had not the privilege of her acquaintance. "Mr. Anbrey Everdene?" she queried.

Mr. Everdene bowed. 'Pray take a seat, madam.'' "No." she said. "I have come marrel with you, and I don't sit down in the houses of my enemies.' "To quarrel with me!" His eyebrows went up. The thought came to him that his visitor was not in her right mind.

"Yes. Perhana I had better explain myself at once. I am the author of 'Fashion and Footlights.' "'Fashion and Footlights,'" he reflected aloud. "'Fashion and Footlights.' Ha!" Comprehension stole over his face and with it a slight amusement. He fished among a pile of volumes and brought out three bound with an ele gance destined to win the hearts of subnrhan circulating libraries. "Here it is. I reviewed it in The Centurian, didn't I?"

His manner bordered upon preoccup tion. In truth, he was thinking what wonderful lashes she had and how becoming a flush of excitement could be to a clear, pale skin. "You assert," she continued warn

Saved His Whisky.

A Greek fisherman recently decided to branch out a little in a business way, so opened a small saloon on the water front. He bought a barrel of whisky from a local dealer, paying 10 per cent down, and agreed to pay the balance when the whisky was delivered. He failed to keep his agreement, and the dealer commenced planning some way to get his whisky or the money. Every time he called on the fisherman he caw the barrel lying in the saloun, and he wanted it. Finally the dealer commenced suit
